

“X”/Vik Label Discography

In 1953, RCA diversified their record operations by establishing three new record labels. RCA Victor remained the main pop and classical label. They established a budget label called Camden. A new wholly owned subsidiary called “X” Label was established. A new R & B oriented label called Groove Records was established.

The April 11, 1953 edition of Billboard magazine said that a new RCA Victor subsidiary label, its first to use independent distribution and was nameless when it was first revealed. For the lack of any better designation, Billboard chose to refer to the new, un-named label in the story as Label “X”; the new label began to hire staffers and decide on a direction, the name stuck.

RCA Victor Records officially announced the formation of label "X" on April 20, 1953. It was a wholly owned subsidiary label of RCA, but had its own independent distribution system. The head of A & R for the label was Joe Carlton. The rest of the year 1953 was spent by establishing the position of the new label. “X” found a niche in the mid fifties by providing covers of R & B hits and quasi-R & B sides such as those by the Three Chuckles, Eddie Fontaine, and Louis Jordan, as a means of introducing the sound of R & B to mainstream America. On January 1, 1956, RCA discontinued the label “X” name, and replaced it with Vik Records. Many of the records that were in print on “X” at that time were reissued on the Vik label. The biggest hits on Vik were by a R&B duo named Mickey and Sylvia.

RCA Victor closed the Vik label on November 1, 1958. Some artists, most notably Mickey & Sylvia and Gisele MacKenzie, were absorbed into the parent company. Others became free agents and signed with other labels, including Brook Benton with Mercury and Teddy Randazzo with ABC-Paramount. Benton, who had one minor charted single on Vik, became a consistent hit-maker on Mercury, with more than three dozen Hot 100 hits through 1965.

Groove Records, which was to be RCA’s new R&B label, was formally introduced in January 1954 with its first releases in February 1954. Bob Rolontz was the head of the label. Unlike “X”, which was designed to operate independently of RCA except that RCA record plants pressed its records, Groove’s primary distribution came through RCA channels.

The purpose of the label was to move into the R&B field with black artists. The original incarnation of Groove was folded into the Vik label in early 1957. The artists were transferred to the Vik label. The Groove label was reestablished in 1961 with singles and there were one or two albums issued in 1964. This second incarnation of the Groove ended in 1965.
